

Professor of Music History Awarded William H. Scheide Prize

Dr. Steven Zohn, Associate Professor of Music History, has been awarded the 2010 William H. Scheide prize by the American Bach Society. The award is for Zohn's recent book, Music for Mixed Taste: Style, Genre, and Meaning in Telemann's Instrumental Works (Oxford Press).

Of Zohn's work, the American Bach Society wrote:

“The scholarly work for which the Scheide prize is awarded goes a long way in the investigation of a contemporary musician and of stylistic and practical conventions that governed musical life. The author paints a picture of a figure arguably as interesting as Bach and one who has much to teach about the 18th-century musical world in which he operated. The volume we honor reflects the broad scope of the author's knowledge of the subject and his music; of the sources that transmit the works; and of their artistic and commercial contexts. The book is a major contribution to 18th-century studies as well as to the literature on the individual at its center.”

Zohn's book is available on Amazon.com