

The Temple University Graduate School is pleased to announce a competition for summer research fellowships for underrepresented graduate students in the Social, Behavioral and Economic Sciences (SBES) at Temple University who are enrolled in the Departments of Anthropology, Criminal Justice, Economics, Geography and Urban Studies, Political Science, Psychology, and Sociology. The purpose of these awards is to provide eligible students with funding to develop a new research proposal or to complete current research efforts. Two levels of summer research fellowships are being offered through the Summer Research Opportunities Program (SROP) of the Alliance for Graduate Education and the Professoriate (AGEP) at the Temple University Graduate School:

- ❑ $5,000 for doctoral students in their first or second year of study at Temple
- ❑ $3,000 for doctoral students whose approved dissertation proposal has been submitted to the Graduate School and who anticipate defending their dissertation by December 2009

Who is eligible for SROP?

- ❑ Historically underrepresented students, including African Americans, Alaskan Natives, Hispanics/Latinos, Native Americans, Native Hawaiians, and other Pacific Islanders, enrolled in a Ph.D. program in the Social, Behavioral or Economic Sciences, specifically, in the Departments of Anthropology, Criminal Justice, Economics, Geography and Urban Studies, Political Science, Psychology, and Sociology at Temple University
- ❑ U.S. citizens or permanent residents
- ❑ Students who are preparing their Ph.D. dissertation proposal or initiating pilot research

Who is NOT eligible?

- ❑ Graduate students who are receiving financial aid in the form of fellowship, assistantship, internship, or externship from Temple University during Summer 2009
